OMITTED ITEMS

Those items for which there is no response or for which both true and false responses have been entered are considered "omitted." The potential for lowering the elevation of individual scales or the overall profile and rendering the administration invalid increases with the number of omitted items. Defensiveness, confusion, carelessness, and indecision are among the common reasons for omitting items. Examination of the content of the items that were omitted by the respondent may reveal specific problem areas or suggest reasons for their not responding appropriately to all items. Following are the items that were omitted:

None omitted.

CRITICAL ITEMS

The MMPI-2 contains a number of items whose content may indicate the presence of psychological settings. may provide an additional source of hypotheses about the respondent. However, caution should be used in interpreting critical items since responses to single items are very unreliable and should not be treated as scores on full-length scales -- for example, an individual could easily mismark or misunderstand a single item and not intend the answer given. The content of the items and the possibility of misinterpretation make it important to keep the test results strictly confidential. Special caution should be exercised when interpreting these items in nonclinical settings.

Acute Anxiety State (Koss-Butcher Critical Items)
